

Standards for Electronic Publishing
An Overview

Mark Bide & Associates

content

Summary	i
1 Introduction	3
2 Terms and definitions	5
2.1 Definitions	5
2.2 Presentation or content?	6
3 Publishing — some background issues	9
3.1 A heterogeneous community	9
3.2 Publishing and the production process	9
3.3 Publishers' motivation for adopting standards	10
3.4 Publishers and metadata	12
4 Publication media	15
4.1 Offline publications	15
4.2 Online and hybrid publications	15
5 Content and content formats	17
5.1 Content types	17
5.2 Content formats - text	17
5.3 Content formats - graphics	17
5.4 Content formats — page facsimiles	18
5.5 Content formats — structured data	18
5.6 Content formats - audio, video and multimedia	18
5.7 Software	19
5.8 Other	19
5.9 Dependence on middleware	19
5.10 Other formats	19
6 The ebook revolution	21
6.1 Should deposit libraries be interested in ebook technology?	21
6.2 Are our respondents interested in ebooks?	22
6.3 Ebook content delivery formats	22
6.4 Producing ebooks	23
6.5 ebooks and other content types	23
6.6 ebooks and metadata	23
6.7 ebooks and encryption	23
6.8 Managing ebook content	24
7 Publishers and content management — an explanatory note	25
7.1 Historic attitudes	25
7.2 The arrival of electronic publishing - the ejournal	25
7.3 The digital revolution and books	26
7.4 Implications for deposit libraries	27
8 The public Web	29
8.1 Publishing and the World Wide Web	29
8.2 Content standards on the Web	29
8.3 Digital preservation and the Web	30
9 Conclusions	31
9.1 Reasons for optimism	31
9.2 Reasons for realism	31
9.3 Some final thoughts	32
10 Acknowledgements	34