

PETER MCCORMICK

When Famine Returns

Ethics, Identity,
and the Deep Pathos
of Things

Universitätsverlag
C.WINTER
Heidelberg

Contents

Preface: A Personal Matter	1
Orientations	7
1. On Doing Philosophical Ethics Today	23
2. On Famine Our Familiar Contemporary	29
3. On Where Famine Recurs	33
4. On Famine Victims	37
5. On What Famine Is	41
6. On Understanding Famine	47
7. On Whether Famine Is an Economic Problem Only	51
8. On Reconsidering the Situation of Famine Victims	57
9. On Why Famine Is Partly a Philosophical Issue	61
10. On Why Famine Is Also Partly an Ethical Matter	65
11. On Whom Famine Concerns as an Ethical Matter	71
12. On the Idea of Persons as Ethical Subjects	75
13. On a Deflationary Account of Persons	81
14. On Difficulties with a Deflationary Account	87
15. On a Naturalistic Account of Persons	91
16. On Difficulties with a Naturalistic Account	97
17. On Why We Must Choose between Such Accounts	101
18. On Why We Need Not Choose Here and Now	107

19. On Empty Questions and Indeterminacy	113
20. On Ethical Concerns for Oneself	119
21. On Self-Concern as Other-Concern	123
22. On Future Persons and Famine Victims	131
23. On Having Moral Obligations to Help Famine Victims	135
24. On Having an Ethical Responsibility to Help Famine Victims	141
25. On Looking Back and Seeing Ahead	145
Envoi: On Acting Rightly as Doing Nothing	149
Appendix: On Estimating the Numbers of Excess Mortality Rates among Children. Dying from Famine and Famine Related Diseases	153
Acknowledgments	157
References	159