

INTRODUCING SCIENCE COMMUNICATION

A PRACTICAL GUIDE

Edited by Mark L. Brake
University of Glamorgan, UK and
Emma Weitkamp
University of West of England, UK

UNIVERSITÄT
LIECHTENSTEIN
Bibliothek

macmillan

Contents

List of Tables	vi
Acknowledgements	vii
Notes on Contributors	viii
Introduction	1
Mark Brake and Emma Weitkamp
Part I Science Communication: In Context
1. The History and Development of Science and Its Communication	9
Mark Brake
2. Science in Popular Culture	29
Ngil Hook and Mark Brake
3. Science and the Citizen	52
Clare Wilkinson
Part II Science Communication: In Practice
4. Writing Science	79
Emma Weitkamp
5. Broadcasting Science	105
Toby Murcott
6. Presenting Science	128
Karen Bultitude
7. Communicating Science in Museums and Science Centres	154
Alison Boyle
Index	175

Tables

3.1	Example consensus conference format	70
6.1	Comparative advantages and disadvantages of presenting science either directly to an audience or via media channels	129
6.2	Comparative features of different types of direct communication methods. All data are specified per event	135
6.3	Examples of good and bad practice and advice for improving general communication skills	139
6.4	Examples of good and bad practice and advice for improving speaking skills	140
6.5	Examples of good and bad practice and advice for improving skills in interacting with the audience	141
6.6	Examples of good and bad practice and advice for using equipment	142