PART 1: INTRODUCTIONS AND EXAMPLES

1. Information Behavior: An Introduction	3
1.1. Introduction	3
1.1.1. A Bit of Vocabulary	4
1.1.2. Emphasizing People Rather Than Systems	5
1.1.3. Ten Myths About Information and Information Seeking	7
1.1.4. When, Why, and Where Information Behavior has been Studied	10
1.1.5. The Contexts in Which Information Behavior Is Investigated	13
1.1.6. The Scope of "Information Behavior"	14
1.2. How This Book Is Organized, and How to Use It	15
1.2.1. Organization of the Chapters	15
1.2.2. Which Chapters to Read If..	16
2. Common Examples of Information Behavior	19
2.1. Six Information Seeking Scenarios	20
2.1.1. Buying Products	20
2.1.2. Finding Information in a Library	24
2.1.3. Healing a Patient	27
2.1.4. Betting on Race Horses	30
2.1.5. Finding the Law	34
2.1.6. "I Want to Know More about Cancer"	36
2.2. Summary	39
"•"
Recommended for Further Reading	41

PART 2: CONCEPTS RELEVANT TO INFORMATION BEHAVIOR

3. The Concept of Information	45
3.1. Searching for a Definition of Information	46
3.1.1. Explicating "Information"	47
3.1.2. The Concept of Information	48
3.1.3. Typologies of Information Concepts	49
3.2. Definitions of Information and their Problems	51
3.2.1. The Influential and Restrictive "Information Theory"	52
3.2.2. Five Problematic Issues in Defining Information	56
3.2.3. Utility as a Requirement	57
3.2.4. Physically-as a Requirement	61
3.2.5. Structure/Process as a Requirement	62
3.2.6. Intentionality as a Requirement	66
3.2.7. Truth as a Requirement	67
3.3. Must there be a Universal Definition of Information?	68
3.4. Distinctions among Information, Knowledge, and Data	72
3.5. Summary	73
Recommended for Further Reading	75
4. Information Needs and Information Seeking	77
4.1. The Motivational Puzzle	77
4.1.1. What Is a "Need?"	78
4.1.2. Needs versus Demands	80
4.2. Four Scholars Ponder Information Needs	81
4.2.1. Seeking Answers	81
4.2.2. Reducing Uncertainty	82
4.2.3. Making Sense	84
4.2.4. The Spectrum of Motivations	85
4.3. The Trouble with Information Needs	87
4.4. Information Seeking and Information Behavior	89
4.5. Summary	91
Recommended for Further Reading	92
5. Related Concepts	95
5.1. Decision Making	96
5.1.1. Making Decisions	96
5.1.2. Solving Problems	99
5.2. Browsing, Etc.	100
5.2.1. Browsing, Scanning, Encountering, and Serendipity	100
5.2.2. Additional Distinctions	102

5.3. Relevance, Pertinence, and Salience	104
5.3.1. Relevance and Pertinence	104
5.3.2. Relevance in Information Retrieval	106
5.3.3. Salience	108
5.4. Avoiding Information	109
5.4.1. Selective Exposure and Information Avoidance	109
5.4.2. Knowledge Gaps and Information Poverty	113
5.4.3. Information Overload and Anxiety	115
5.5. Information versus Entertainment	120
5.6. Sharing and Collaboration	127
5.7. Summary	129
Recommended for Further Reading	129

PART 3: MODELS, PARADIGMS, AND THEORIES IN THE STUDY OF INFORMATION BEHAVIOR

6. Models of Information Behavior	133
6.1. Models	134
6.1.1. What is a Model?	134
6.1.2. Models of Information Seeking	135
6.2. Examples of Information Seeking Models	139
6.2.1. The First Wilson Model	139
6.2.2. The Krikelas Model	140
6.2.3. The Ellis Model	143
6.2.4. The Kuhlthau Model	145
6.2.5. The Leckie Model	146
6.2.6. The Bystrom and Jarvelin Model	148
6.2.7. The Savolainen Model	149
6.2.8. The Johnson Model	151
6.2.9. The Second Wilson Model	155
6.2.10. Comparing the Models	157
6.2.11. Additional Models	158
Recommend for Further Reading	161
7. Metatheories, Paradigms, and Theories	163
7.1. Metatheories, Perspectives, and Paradigms	164
7.1.1. Metatheories and the Great Divide	164
7.1.2. Perspectives and Paradigms	166
7.2. Theories	168
7.2.1. What Is a Theory?	168
7.2.2. Levels of Theory	170
7.3. Sources of Theory in Information Seeking	172
7.4. Objectivist Research Paradigms	174

7.4.1. Zipfs Principle of Least Effort and Cost-Benefit	175
7.4.2. Uses and Gratifications and Expectancy Theory	178
7.4.3. Uncertainty Management Theory, etc.	184
7.4.4. Other Objectivist Theories	185
7.5. Interpretivist Research Paradigms	187
7.5.1. Constructivist, Activity Theory, and Sense-making	187
7.5.2. Social Constructionism and Discourse Analysis	190
7.5.3. Phenomenology	192
7.5.4. Other Interpretivist Paradigms	192
7.6. Mapping the Theoretical Influences on Authors	194
7.7. Summary	196
Recommended for Further Reading	197

PART 4: METHODS FOR STUDYING INFORMATION BEHAVIOR

8. The Research Process	201
8.1. Relating Theory to Methodology	201
8.1.1. Why We Need Methods	202
8.1.2. Techniques of Measurement and Analysis	204
8.2. Basic Considerations in Research	205
8.2.1. Stages of Research	205
8.2.2. Induction and Deduction	207
8.2.3. Validity and Reliability	208
8.2.4. Purpose, Units, and Time	211
8.2.5. Ethics in Research	213
8.3. Summary	216
Recommended for Further Reading	218
9. Methods: Examples by Type	221
9.1. Types and Examples of Methods	222
9.1.1. The Case Study: Analyzing an Analyst	222
9.1.2. Laboratory Experiments: Shopping for Cars	227
9.1.3. Field Experiments: Reading the Label	232
9.1.4. Postal Surveys: Information Needs and Issue Relevance	235
9.1.5. E-mail and Web Surveys: Studying Scholars	238
9.1.6. Brief Interviews: Studies of Everyday Folks	240
9.1.7. Intensive Interviews: The Lives of Janitors and Brothers	246
9.1.8. Focus Group Interviews: Doctors and Nurses Search	250
9.1.9. Network Analysis: Mongols and Managers	252
9.1.10. Discourse Analysis: Repertoires and Practices	253

9.1.11. Diaries and Experience Sampling: Incidents and Alarms	254
9.1.12. Unobtrusive Approaches: Historical Analysis	257
9.1.13. Unobtrusive Approaches: Content Analysis	260
9.1.14. Mixed/Multiple Methods	262
9.1.15. Meta-Analysis	264
9.2. Summary	265
Recommended for Further Reading	266

PART 5 : RESEARCH RESULTS AND REFLECTIONS

10. Reviewing the Research: Its History, Size, and Topics	271
10.1. Overview of Part Five	271
10.1.1. The History of Studying Information Behavior	272
10.1.2. Estimating the Size of the Literature	274
10.1.3. Contexts and Categories	277
10.1.4. Choosing Examples of Studies	280
10.2. Summary	282
Recommended for Further Reading	283
11. Research by Occupation	285
11.1. By Occupational Category	285
11.1.1. Scientists and Engineers	287
11.1.2. Social Scientists	294
11.1.3. Humanities Scholars	297
11.1.4. Health Care Providers	301
11.1.5. Managers	309
11.1.6. Journalists	313
11.1.7. Lawyers	315
11.1.8. Farmers	317
11.1.9. Other Occupations	318
11.2. Summary	321
Recommended for Further Reading	322
12. Research by Social Role and Demographic Group	325
12.1. Two Other Ways of Studying People	326
12.2. By Role	326
12.2.1. Citizen or Voter	328
12.2.2. Consumer	333
12.2.3. Hobbyist	336
12.2.4. Gatekeeper	338
12.2.5. Patient	340
12.2.6. Students	346

12.2.7. Other Roles	348
12.3. By Demographic Group	349
12.3.1. Age	349
12.3.2. Racial and Ethnolinguistic Minorities	355
12.3.3. Socioeconomic Status	357
12.3.4. Other Demographic Groups	360
12.4. Summary	362
Recommended for Further Reading	362
13. Reviewing, Critiquing, Concluding	365
13.1. Reviewing	365
13.2. Critiquing	368
13.2.1. A History of Complaint	368
13.2.2. Other Considerations	370
13.3. Conclusions and Trends	373
13.3.1. Eight Lessons of Information Behavior Research	375
13.3.2. Trends and Final Thoughts	378
Recommended for Further Reading	379
Appendix A: Glossary	381
Appendix B: Questions for Discussion and Application	393
